

AFFORDABLE HEALTH CARE AT THE WORLD'S FINEST HOSPITALS IN ASIA

ABOUT MEDBIRDS®

Medbirds, a division of Medical Care International, Inc., is a U.S.-based medical tourism facilitator that connects patients to leading medical facilities in Thailand and India for affordable, high-quality health care. Its website is <http://medbirds.com>.

Medbirds is owned and operated by a seasoned group of health care professionals, including: a retired heart transplant coordinator, a Registered Nurse who once worked at Bangkok Hospital before moving to the United States, a former health care marketing and communications executive, and business lawyers who spent many years guiding health care providers in all aspects of running an ethically responsible and regulatory-compliant organization.

THE AMERICAN HEALTH CARE CRISIS

The per capita cost of health care in the United States is about twice that in other major industrialized countries. Overall, the health care costs have risen to over 15% of the Gross Domestic Product (GDP). Still, an estimated 46 million Americans are uninsured, and, yet another 25 million are underinsured (i.e., have private insurance but with limited coverage or high deductibles).

Approximately 60 percent of the bankruptcies in the United States are caused by illness and healthcare costs that Americans can't pay. Most of those who filed for bankruptcy were middle-class, well-educated homeowners, according to a report by The American Journal of Medicine.

EMERGING TRENDS OF MEDICAL TOURISM

The cost of treatment for medical procedures in the U.S. is often prohibitive and far beyond the average person's ability to pay for it. Many people who need help put off seeking it because they simply cannot afford it. Many surgical procedures (e.g., heart bypass, joint replacement, spinal disc repair, lasik eye surgery, lapband weight reduction surgery, etc.) cost 50% to 90% less abroad. Those huge savings can make the cost of even major medical care affordable for anyone forced to pay out of pocket for treatment. That includes:

- Americans without health insurance;
- Someone whose insurance has such large deductible and co-pay amounts that out-of-pocket expenses for domestic surgery would exceed the entire cost (medical plus travel) of treatment abroad. The cost differences are so tremendous, that this is often the case;
- People seeking care (i.e. costly dental work or cosmetic surgery) not covered by insurance;
- Citizens of countries with national healthcare systems requiring six- to 12-month waits for non-emergency surgery. That's a long time to wait for someone with a painful condition like a herniated back disc, making the low cost of immediate surgery abroad a compelling option.

In 2007, an estimated 750,000 Americans traveled abroad for medical care. The projected increase in the number of American medical tourists is from 750,000 in 2007 to 15.75 million in 2017. Worldwide, medical travel is growing rapidly and Thailand has become one of the major world centers attracting people from all corners of the world to its top-quality surgical and medical facilities.
